
Destructive Storm at Tampico.

From the New-Orleans Picayune.

On or about the 6th inst, Tampico was visited by a severe norther, which joined to continual heavy rains, caused a disastrous overflow of the city. The loss and damage done to goods was very heavy, and the destruction to life and property was no less severe. The pilot stations at the mouth of the river, together with the fort, were completely washed away, as was also the ground which they occupied. A like inundation has not been experienced in Tampico for the last thirty years. Eleven vessels were lying outside the bar, and several of them lost their deckloads. The schooner J. H. Dieks, of New-Haven, from Mobile, with lumber, was struck by lightning, carrying away her mainmast, and injuring her so severely as to cause her to be condemned. On the 25th, after the gale had subsided, the schooner Mary Caroline, Capt. LAURENT, in charge of two pilots, endeavored to cross the bar; she struck the northern breakers, and vessel and cargo soon became a total wreck.

The New York Times

Published: August 20, 1855

Copyright © The New York Times